

GRACE NOTES — May 2025

THE REFLECTING POOL

In the reading from Acts for the third Sunday of Easter, we see how Saul (The Apostle Paul) was “blown away” – to use modern terminology- by his encounter with Jesus on the road to Damascus. He fell to the ground blinded, and eventually his sight was restored and he set about proclaiming Jesus as the Messiah and sharing the Good News with the gentile world. Famous passage! People can make the mistake of seeing Paul as little more than a murderer or a madman, foaming at the mouth and indiscriminately killing members of the young Jesus movement. He may have been crazed but he was not crazy. He was a zealot. Saul was a true believer in the Jewish faith and that faith convinced him that Jesus was not the Messiah. Consequently, he was willing to take extreme measures to wipe out this new, corrupted strain of Judaism before it could spread. One thing you can say about a zealot, or, someone who is so consumed by a belief or an issue that they can't think of anything else, is that they are blind. They can't process any information contrary to their viewpoint and will not tolerate any dissension. They can be boring, too! Saul was struck down by blindness to emphasize that point. No wonder Ananias, the follower of Jesus who was instructed to attend to Saul when he was struck down, was reluctant to do so. The guy was dangerous.

After his conversion, Saul - who- was- now- Paul. was a deeply committed apostle of what would be the new Christian faith. He was not, however, a zealot in the traditional or worst sense of the word. He took his time planting seeds in the gentile world. He worked among the people. He shared meals with them. He did not scorn or humiliate them for their beliefs. He chose instead to show them a better way of living. Humility, service, and steadfastness in the face of resistance, were the hallmarks of this better way. Paul's letters were intended to keep the members of the young churches “on point”. He did not want them to fall back into “imperial” thinking.

Think about it. Today in our political and social divide we see too much inflexible zealotry. It can blind us to truths and solutions because we are unwilling to come down off the soapbox. Paul discovered a better way. So can we. It's true that you can't deal with the devil. It's also true that only God can change hearts. I figure there are not many devils out there. Mostly we just find people who are somewhere on the zealot scale. My rule is this; if there is an indication that greater charity, service, and respect for others can come out of fellowship with the “opposition”, then I'm all for it. That's a good thing to pray for. If not, we must still let our voices be heard. Jesus did. Alleluia!

Peace,
Fr. Joe
